Mr. Alleyne was the automatist. Nothing had been suggested as a subject for communication, and neither of the sitters had had anything in mind on the subject of the war. F.B.B. had not yet adopted the method of reading aloud to the automatist. During the sitting therefore, there was desultory conversation. The script is difficult, and in many places illegible. In the transcript, doubtful passages are italicized. When the eighth month of the year ends, failure will be more evident in those that ye pursue. The twenty-fourth day will see surcease of battle. The clear outline of these verities will shadow forth the reality, and ye shall grasp them. Proof is not needed, but ye shall have your proof for others sake. The rest is quite illegible. Writing was resumed in the evening of the same day, with the following result. The first part has reference to the segregation of a chosen people from the ends of the Earth, but only fragments can be read, and some words are conjectural. . . of the Israelites, one common stock, and others including the yellow races of the East. . . The chosen...
