

Stargazing: The Instant Guide

Your view of the sky depends on where you are on the Earth. The star maps in this guide are based on the latitude of London, but can be used anywhere in the British Isles, northern Europe or northern America. Unless you have a telescope, the best time to stargaze is around 900pm until the late to the summer twilight. Stargazing is best done in areas with low levels of light pollution – away from major cities – and on a clear and cloudless night. This guide has four different star maps, one for each season. You'll need a compass for to know which direction is north in order to locate Polaris, the North Star, which is the star map point for each of the seasonal stargazing guides.
