It is not improbable, that Milton might borrow the Metamorphosis of Satan on his first sight of Paradise from this Pagan idea of the transformation of Bacchus: Down he alights among the sportful herd Of those four-footed kinds, himself now one, Now other, as their shape serv d best his end Nearer to view his prey . And this probability is increased by the image in the following line, which conveys the idea of the nvpKphsyuv tiw in this, passage of Euripides: About them round A lion now he...
